When Trust Becomes a Trap: The Untold Story of Adult Trafficking

This is the heartbreaking story of 40-year-old Suchitra (Name changed).

One day, at Hyderabad railway station, a woman named Pinki approached her with kind words and false promises. She told Suchitra that a safe housemaid job was waiting for her in Delhi. Hoping to give her children a better life, Surekha trusted her.

But the journey that was meant to bring hope pushed her into darkness.

The moment she reached Delhi, everything changed. She was taken straight to GB Road and locked inside a brothel. For three painful years, Suchitra lived like a prisoner. She was forced into sex work every single day—her dignity, her freedom, her voice all taken away.

She was not allowed to step outside. The trafficker stayed with her constantly, shadowing her like a guard to make sure she never escaped. Even during her periods, she was forced to “work.”

She earned money, but she never saw a single rupee—everything was snatched away by her madam.

Whenever she cried and begged to go home, the trafficker would say softly, “Just two more months...”

But those “two months” became three long, unbearable years.

Surekha is a mother of three children. With tears in her eyes, she told us her family has been searching for her all this time, not knowing where she disappeared.

People often believe trafficking happens only to minors. But Surekha’s story screams a painful truth—anyone can be trafficked if they are vulnerable.

Her story is a reminder for all of us: awareness saves lives. Silence destroys them.
